Katie, my angel in heaven. I can't believe it's been 2 years since you moved on to live with Jesus. As you can see, by some miracle I found the picture of us when we went to watch the meteor showers. It was such a fun and carefree night. Laughing and drinking hot cocoa up at Mauna Kea observatory. I still remember how cold it was, and we only brought 2 small blankets!! It's nice to remember all the fun memories we had. I'm thankful I had so many. We are truly Lucy and Ethel. I miss you so much. Love you Katie girl ❤️

I'll close my eyes and meditate. Let my mind be free of any thoughts. Concentrate on just my breathing. Till my body feels like it's floating. Then all of a sudden I am there. At that white sand beach. With my face looking towards the sunset. I can feel the light sprays of the ocean waves crashing in the distance. Then a warm comforting gentle breeze falls gently on my face. There you are. Walking on the beach heading towards me. You sit beside me. We dig our feet in the soft sand. I see your face smile at me. You feel my sadness in my heart, so you grab my hand. As I start to cry, you tell me, "Hey Nan. Don't cry. I'm here with you right now, for just a moment." I rest my head on your left shoulder. We sit there, quietly. Enjoying each other's company, watching the sunset.

I'd like to think the dreams I have that you are in; it is your way of visiting me. Sometimes I catch myself in a moment, I want to call you when something funny happens to me. For a brief second, I forget that you are away. I often think about all the good times we had; wishing I could have appreciated it more. I miss you most when I'm alone, but more when I'm laughing or having a good time, cause I know it would've been even more extraordinary if you were here. Most of my favorite memories were with you. I know I should enjoy the time god has blessed me with, but I can't help thinking when will WE be together again. I miss you so much Katie.

There are days that I look at your picture, smile, blow you a kiss, and light your candle. I talk to you knowing you are there on the other side, listening. Memories are a remarkable thing. You hear a song, smell something in the air...It all brings you back to that particular day, as if time never passed. Recently, I've been pulled back to those days. I miss you Katie. "Can't we pretend that airplanes in the night sky are shooting stars. I could really use a wish right now, wish right now, wish right now" This song was playing on the radio. We were just about to leave Gramma's to drop you off at the airport. I remember it was raining, because I thought the weather reflected how I felt inside. You told me you loved this song, and said you needed more shooting stars in your life.

Tomorrow is going to be a hard day. I just cannot believe that you passed a year ago. I can still remember how emotionally distraught I felt. I was in total shock and denial that you were soon departing from us. I am still traumatized by it. I don't think I've ever felt so alone in my life. You were always my companion through everything. It still have moments when I breakdown because I still haven't accepted the reality of you not being here. Katie, her ever it is you are, I know that you are talking to me and telling me you are next to me, even though I can't see you. I carry your picture everywhere I go. I talk to you when I'm alone in my car, as if we were in an actual conversation. You are the reason I don't take anyone for granted anymore. I pray God stays close to us all tomorrow. I pray we all fell your presence, that it will comfort us in this time of sadness. I know you know how much I love you. Gosh, I miss you so much Twinkies.

December 5th 2020. It was around this time that your life tragically took a turn. I find myself feeling flashbacks of constant heartache. I was certain you would make it through. How can I go on without you? It still tears me up inside. Regret, remorse, guilt, sadness. I don't think it will ever go away. I love you so much Kate. I miss you more than ever.

Day 330It's nights like this. I'm listening to the rain and Christmas music, watching the fireplace, with the glowing lights of the Christmas tree behind me. I think back to all the Christmas's that I looked forward to. Only because you were coming home for the holidays. Christmas was never the same without you. I remember the first time we flocked a tree together. We didn't buy enough flocking spray, so the side that was pale, we turned it to face the corner of Bryson's Dad's house. We had so much fun. I miss those days, but most of all, I miss you Katie.

What day is it today? July 9, 2020. Day 206 I've been up since 3:30 this morning. I feel it's because I've been praying a lot these days, asking Jesus to help me find the strength within myself to find the courage to sit down and scan the rest of the pictures I've collected of you. I believe it was the beginning of March, when I sent everyone a group text letting them know I was making your memory book. It's now July. It's really hard, as I find myself every morning, waking up as if no time had passed since you departed. It's still as fresh in my heart, as if the pain hasn't transitioned. Time heals all wounds, as they say. Yeah right. I still have about 30 pictures to go. I basically had to work through the pain to finally get myself to read the memories that your mom and dad, Jim, Mel, and Miya wrote Niagara Falls. It's such a surreal feeling to read through everyone's memories and thoughts and relive those moments as if you are still here. When I read your words that were in your moms, Jim's, and Miya's memories of you; I can hear the raspiness in your voice I can see your face. The way your eyes light up, your body curls inward, while your hand covers part of your nose and mouth as you laugh. I know what your facial expression looks like when you feel sympathy towards animals or people. I close my eyes, and see how nonchalant you walk around people who are captivated by you. It was such a joy to read through everyone's hilarious stories of you. I laughed so hard, but it brought on the biggest cries. Even now, my eyes well up. I miss you so much Twinks. "The sad cello music playing in the background isn't helping", I could hear you saying that to me. Telling me to change it, only after changing it, it's another sad cello piece. "Oh my god Nan, find some good house music or something!" You are here with me I know that for sure. Sometimes I smell cinnamon and either a Noble or Douglas Fir Christmas tree. Other days I smell Britney Spears' perfume, "Fantasy". The day has just begun, but I feel it's already been a long morning. Stay by my side, always. "I'll always be with you".

Day 130 If I were able to give you a flower, it would have to be something special. No ordinary rose or carnation. No bouquet of some random everyday collection. I would give you something that holds a deeper meaning. Deserve a flower that represents a strong life force, poise, and beauty. One that is so bold, it can stand alone. This is my first bloom of my magnolia tree. I dedicate it to you. Miss you and love you most.

Day 94 I was thinking of Marilyn Monroe, and how we both admired her. As iconic as she was, Marilyn Monroe's life was portrayed differently than who she actually was. She was indeed a beautiful person, but as beauty goes, she was envied by women, and used by society. Her kindness and loving heart was covered up by makeup and a luxurious lifestyle. From the outside looking in, everyone didn't see that it was hard on her physically and mentally, to keep up with all the expectations the world had placed on her. Her life was like Elton John said, "A candle in the wind". A life that ended too quickly and tragically. Aside from her beauty and historical pink dress and diamonds that we both adored, we both could relate to who she really was underneath it all. Now, whenever I see a picture of Marilyn Monroe, I see you.

Day 56As each day passes, I realize that there are many people who claim that they were someone close to you. I see right through their facades. Those who actually cared, were the ones that had Katie's best interest at heart. She didn't have to change who she was around people who actually loved her. Those who truly loved her did NOT take advantage of her kindness. The one thing I will carry with me that I have learned from Katie is that she forgave the most dirtiest, vile people that pretend to be her "BFF" Posting pictures on their FB, AS IF. I am truly grateful for the time I had with her. She was my sister/daughter/best friend that none of you imposters will ever hold claim to. We had the best times because with me, Katie could be herself. We will always be Lucy and Ethel, always be peas and carrots.

Day 11It will take longer than my lifetime to get over your loss. Where do I begin? Even now, when I see your face or remember all the memories we shared, I cry. We had a bond that started the day you were born. Even though we were cousins, I considered you as my own sister. I will cherish every moment we spent together, I still remember the day your dad called Grandmas house to let us know you were born. The first time I saw you, I remember thinking how cute you were. Curly brown hair, that as it got longer, Grandma would twirl your hair in the front, and pin it up. You had beautiful big brown eyes, and long eyelashes that I admired. Your personality that was both spunky and funny. I think that was the reason we became so close. Our personalities were so much alike. One of the many memories I will share today is when we were down at Uncle Bobo's house and you had the chicken pox. I have no idea why, but my dad insisted he needed to take pictures of you. With each picture he took, you can see the progression of how it started off good, but by the tenth picture you were so upset. I felt so bad for you, but you know Uncle Bobo, he kept taking pictures after pictures until you were so angry you started screaming. At that point I couldn't take it. I just picked you up and carried you away.
